Jim: I enjoy working for Chevron because you know Chevron's always challenged me. They've given me lots of opportunities for many different jobs, many different areas. I've worked at conventional, unconventional, offshore, onshore, domestically here in Canada, and internationally. I think I'm making a difference here at Chevron by being involved on the front end of building up a profitable business here within our tight rock business, the Duvernay, Horn River, Liard, long term energy resources here for, not only profitable growth for Chevron, but also for the problems of Alberta.

What I think distinguishes Chevron from competitors as a preferred place to work is, I think we value work life balance. We have a lot of health and wellness programs in place, our compressed work weeks schedule, the people as well. We respect each other. We trust each other. I think a big one is the way we partner with others, whether that's with the communities, with industry, with regulators, with government, and we really work together. When we say we want to be the partner of choice, that isn't just words on paper. It's, we actually try to make it real.

I think the most exciting factor about Chevron's future is really the growth. We've built up a very strong queue of growth opportunities in our tight rock business, the Duvernay, Horn River, Liard, LNG, Oil Sands, both the Athabasca Oil Sands project in Ell's River, and exploration in the frontiers, so a lot of good growth opportunities here in Canada. It's an exciting time to be here.
