

Wendy – Management of Organizational Change

<http://www.chevron.ca/careers/meet-our-people/wendy>

Wendy: Well, I've been working for Chevron for 18 years now and there's a reason I've been working here this long. It's because my values really align with the Chevron values. I think every time I see the John Watson video in February, I always think of all the great things we do and I look at all the places that we make a difference in our organization, throughout the world, and I'm so proud and honored to be working for such a great company.

This role that I'm in now, the Execution Excellence Project Manager, is really trying to help the organization align to where we're needing to go. What I've been trying to do is really play a key role in just making sure that we're all integrating and looking forward on what CBU or Chevron Canada Resources needs to do to be a successful organization. It's really making sure that from our assets, aligned all the way down to the internal partner organizations, that they know what we need to do to achieve our results at the end of the year.

I really think what distinguishes us from other places in industry, and our organization is we have great opportunities. We have great assets here that we're working towards. If you look at our queue of opportunities within the Canada business unit, you just know that we have a great future ahead of us.